

Kikoti Camp Tarangire

This luxury, tented camp recaptures the time-honoured splendour of the traditional safari camp of yesteryear, when comfort was defined by superior service and campfire hospitality rather than modern conveniences and anonymous welcome. Each of the ten large tents has sewn-in floors and plumbed ensuite facilities and have been laid out in the traditional safari manner with wooden beds, fresh linen and a veranda from which to admire the views of the Silale wetlands in the valley below.

Kikoti's proximity to Tarangire National Park allows the camp to offer a wide choice of exploratory game-drives through the classic African savannah and acacia parkland of this un-proclaimed wilderness. Moreover, the position in the migratory corridor just outside the Park provides a range of activities that are forbidden elsewhere in the game lands of Northern Tanzania. Nature walks with rangers are an exhilarating way to get back to the primeval state of nature. The lodge also offers night driving, a chance to discover a plethora of nocturnal animals that roam around the bush.

With a nearby Maasai village, part of this joint venture, clients can visit their homesteads for an insight into the customs and lifestyle of this fascinating ethnic group or to join in the traditional dancing around the campfire lit in the kraal area.

- 10 large tents.
- Set up as part of a community project.
- Walking/night safaris possible.

Our View

This simple, but beautiful camp harks back to the days when Ralph Lauren was not seen on the bed linen!! The balance of the camp is just right with relatively simple but tidy rooms and a stunning communal area with thatched dining area and camp fire.

On the whole, this camp, while suffering slightly from being outside the park, is a very good choice for those looking to save a bit of money but still have a really authentic experience.
